OUR PRISONERS AT RICHMOND .- There quite a stir in the rebel dominions over the permission by their Government to send supplies to the Federal prisoners at Richmond. The rebel papers are full of denunciations and demands that it be at once stopped. In the rebel Congress, on the 8th inst., Mr. Foote of Tenn., accused Commissioner Northrup with having starved the Federal prisoners and with steathily placing the Confederate Covernment in the attitude charged by the Federals. From the 1st to the 26th of Necember, ment was furnished to the prisones very irregularly. For 12 days the supthe was implequate and for eight days they none at all. We have often had occasion before to speak of the excellence of those views, but those now on exhibition are far more finely finished than any we have before seen, and we venture to say no larger or better collection can be found in New England.

Passing through another archef doorway, and rising six steps, (which are all the stairs the visitor has to go up,) we enter the Operating Room, which is 17 by 48 feet. This room is arched overhead, the floor covered with a beautiful tapeatry carpet, and the wall with very fine sicel engravings; among them a set of Cole's ocietrat-ei Voyage of Life. The skylight is made of ground glass, is near-ly 16 feet square, extending from the ridge to by to seet square, extending from the ridge to the eaves, with a side light extending from the eaves to the floor, the two combined forming a light of superior excellence. The number and variety of operating chairs, tables and backgrounds is so great, that we should suppose the only difficulty would be far the customer to decide which he would prefer.

On the right of the constitute occur is a result of the customer to decide which he would prefer.

On the right of the operating room is a row of smaller rooms—the first a gentlemen's dressing room furnished with all the necessaries for a gentleman's toilet. The next is a ladies' dress ing room, and is elegantly fitted up. The floor is covered with a handsome relvet carpet and the walls with a beautiful gold paper. A highly polished Italian marble wash-stand with running water, a large mirror with an arched top and black wainut frame, carved and ornamented lounge and rocking chair, compose the furniture of the room. The most interesting feature about it, however, is the window, which is one of Mr. Styles' own "getting up." It is composed of eight large panes of glass, and each one is storn-
